

Mental Health and Crisis Resources for Coping with Violence

Incidents of violence and mass shootings are devastating — especially for those who lose loved ones in the wake of such traumatic events. We are often left feeling helpless, struggling to find resources that could help make sense of the situation or provide immediate crisis counseling to those impacted.

This resource guide, compiled by the Maryland Department of Health’s Behavioral Health Administration, provides tips and resources for those impacted, including youth, parents and caregivers, teachers and behavioral health professionals.

Tips for coping:

- Avoid overexposure to the news and social media. This is especially important for young people.
- Stay cognizant of your emotional health and how it is impacted by the news you consume, as well as the emotional health of the people around you.
- Attend to your self-care needs: go for walks, listen to music, meditate, exercise. Try to keep a normal routine as much as possible. Get enough sleep and nourishment.
- Maintain ongoing contact with your support systems, such as friends and family.
- Try to recognize when you may need extra support. Don’t be afraid to ask for help (or offer help to someone who may also be struggling emotionally).
- Check on the young ones in your life. Help them talk about their feelings about the situation to help ease their fears.
- Seek professional counseling or therapy for yourself and loved ones as needed.
